

and are we going to see a repeat of this first 100 days?

Mr. ARMEY. If the gentleman will yield, we are working on a schedule that we expect will be, in fact, much more family friendly that we hope to be able to give to the gentleman to take with him before his April recess so he and his family could have a better planning of the remainder of the year.

If the gentleman will just bear with us, we would try to complete that and make it available as soon as possible.

Mr. ROEMER. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. GEPHARDT. If the gentleman would just answer one more question of mine, the distinguished majority leader and I have had a conversation before about Members being able to depend upon getting out of here for the Easter recess on or about April 7 or no later than April 8, which is the Saturday before Palm Sunday. I take it we are still on a schedule that would give Members some certainty that they could make plans for after that date?

Mr. ARMEY. If the gentleman will yield, the distinguished minority leader knows I am by nature a rather cautious person in my optimism regarding these things, but what I have been telling my colleagues is I would feel very confident that I can guarantee you that you will wake up in your bed in your home district on Palm Sunday. I am not confident that you will not also retire to your bed in your home district on Palm Sunday. But I think it is a realistic optimism and I believe in fact that definitely by the Saturday prior to Palm Sunday the gentleman should have been on his way home and have his 3 weeks' time.

Mr. GEPHARDT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEPHARDT. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WISE. If I could address the majority leader for just a second, would he be able to inform us that he has a nonrefundable ticket that gets him home on that day, and then we would all take great security in that.

If I could just ask in a serious moment, Mr. Majority Leader, you do not see me rise on this subject too often, but I would just like to follow on a second on the gentleman from Indiana's theme. And I think I speak for both parties and I speak for members of the staff as well, that this schedule is working a great toll. And we understand, while perhaps not agree that there is the commitment to 100 days, if I could just share a couple of examples with the gentleman, I have not seen my two children awake, my young children, 7 and 5, in a waking state after 8 a.m. in the last 2 work weeks. My son drew a picture, my 7-year-old on Dads' Day and on Valentines Day, and on Dads' Day at school he drew a picture, they all drew pictures of their fathers, and the picture he drew of his father was a pretty good cartoon, actually, with a moustache, with a suitcase in one hand and a hand on the door and a balloon coming out of the mouth that said, "Goodbye." Those things get to you after a while.

Now, in fairness, our constituents do the same thing. The gentleman and I have constituents who are truck drivers, coal miners, sales people working two or three jobs trying to make it. They agonize that they do not see their children in every bit the same way. But there might be sometimes a little bit of a difference though. Sometimes they see a point at the end where they are going to get to. If nothing else, they understand that they are working for hours and they are paid on that basis.

I walked out of here last night knowing I was not going to see my children for dinner again, walked out of here and walked down the hall. I wanted to see what the other body was doing. It had been a historic day. The Chamber was shut, and so as I drifted around the Senate it suddenly occurred to me that we are missing a lot of meals over here to push the contract out. I do not know that they have missed one in anticipation of it.

So I guess I would just close, Mr. Leader, with more of a statement than a question. It is not meant to be acrimonious, but just a statement that both parties, everyone in here I believe professes to be for family values. We argue about that goal. We argue about how to get there. But we both believe we are standing up strongly for American families. I guess I do not think we really represent America's families if we are not with them, and I guess I believe that we do not move America's families very far ahead if we are leaving our own behind.

So, on the theme of the gentleman from Indiana, I would just ask that as the majority leader plans a schedule for the 100 days and what comes after, I would greatly appreciate the considerations raised here. As I say, I know the other side is feeling the same and wants to accommodate, but we have to remember our families as we seek to represent all of America's families.

Mr. ARMEY. If the gentleman will yield, I cannot help but observe to the gentleman from West Virginia that I have found in my own life that the time that I have seen him spend with his family has been much more enjoyable than the time I have spent with him, and we would like to keep the gentleman with his family as much as possible, and we will be working toward that objective.

Mr. WISE. We can reach a consensus on that.

REFORM THE SYSTEM

(Mrs. SEASTRAND asked and was given permission to address the House for one minute.)

Mrs. SEASTRAND. Mr. Speaker, we are entering one of the most difficult debates about fundamental reform in our Nation's history. Through perverse incentives, our Government has created a morally corrupt welfare state that discourages work and subsidizes illegitimacy. The welfare system is a tragic failure.

This debate is not about saving money, it is about saving family and the next generation. It is not about more spending, it is about more sincerity. It is not about stopping payments, it is about stopping poverty. It is not about an election cycle, it is about the dependency cycle. This is the greatest country the world has ever known. After 30 years and $5 trillion of failure, we can—we must—do better.

We have a plan we will be debating soon on the floor of the House that sets out to end incentives that promote self-destructive behavior. This plan has a vision for ending the welfare state, the Clinton plan offer only a mirage. We must work with compassion and common sense to end a system that has hurt the very people the very families we have set out to help.
